

“Organ Donation: A Gift or Obligation”

Mrs Amal Cheema

Wellesley College

No faith or creed formally forbids organ donation from the living or deceased; many even see it as a testament of love. Yet, there is a distinction between embodied theology and religious identification. In this talk, Amal Cheema, an American researcher, will discuss her experiences in interviewing people at the intersection of organ donation and religious-based bioethics in Southeast Asia and Europe. She will discuss various systems of organ donation and opinions around the current state of affairs in Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia, France, and Croatia.

This lecture has been realized and organized with the help of the Croatian branch of the Ahmadiyyah Muslim Community in Zagreb.
